Near the town of Wadduwa, on Sri Lanka's southwestern coast, Projects Abroad has set up a computer center. The program offers free, three-month courses in information technology to children in the community. Together with a local instructor, volunteers follow a set curriculum that teaches the students basic computer skills: how to use Microsoft Office applications (Word, Excel, PowerPoint), conduct Internet research, and communicate online. Outside the classroom, go white-water rafting on the Kelani River, relax on Wadduwa's golden beaches, or hike to the summit of a 7,360-foot sacred mountain that has drawn pilgrims for more than 1,000 years. From $2,045 for a two-week program (longer stays encouraged), including homestay lodging and meals.
